Arrival of Grant at Raleigh—The Truce Terminated.

[OFFICIAL.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, April 26, 1865.
8.30 P. M.

Maj.-Gen. Dix:

A dispatch has just been received from Department Commander Grant, dated Raleigh, 9 A. M., April 24th. He says:

"I reached here this morning and delivered to General Sherman the reply to his negotiations with Johnston. Were not substantially your instructions terminating the truce, and information that civil matters would not be considered in any conference between army commanders.

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Important from the West.

Western Troops Ordered to the Front.

CINCINNATI, April 25.—Orders were received yesterday by telegraph to the front, immediately, all troops in the camps in Ohio and Indiana.

Gen. Wilson's Raid.

CHATTANOOGA, April 24.—The Chattanooga Gazette has robed news of the movements of General Wilson up to the 20th. Selma, Ala., Columbus, Ga., Macon and Macon have fallen into our hands. The rebel General Dyer was taken at Selma with 145 men captured at West Point. Two bridges the railroad depot, and all the rolling stock of the West Point and the Montgomery railroad were destroyed at the former place. A thousand rebels were captured at Columbus and paroled.

Governor Brown, of Georgia, has called out all the militia between the ages of 16 and 50, for the defence of the state.

On the 19th inst. a body of raiders were on the West Point and Atlanta railroad, forty miles south south of Atlanta.

General Wilson appeared to be heading in the West-ward, which indicates a raid on Mobile. The rebel papers give no clue.

The Atlanta papers have of the assassination of President Lincoln, but make no comments upon it. They claim the surrender of General Lee's army, and say he was all right on the 4th inst., and that Grant had 30,000 men in the hands of Jeffers Davis's Guard.

CONDITION OF THE SEWARDS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 24.

Hon. E. M. Stanton:

The recovery of Seward is convincingly rapid. Mr. Frederick Seward speaks most distinctly this evening and is better.

Original. J. K. BARNES, Surgeon General.

Lee's Surrendered Soldiers.

The Attorney General's Opinion.

Washington, April 24.—Attorney General Speed has made the following decision on the subject of the capitulation of Lee. In reply to a letter of the Secretary of War, referring to those paroled, he decides:

First—That the rebel officers who surrendered to General Grant are no longer in local, civil, and military rank, and are not entitled to the privileges given in the terms of the capitulation, but are rebels.

Second—That persons in the civil service of the rebellion, or who have otherwise given to aid and comfort to the rebellion, are not entitled to the benefit of the capitulation. In reply to a letter of the Secretary of War, relative to Washington under date, April 24, he says

THE NEW YORK SUN.
WEDNESDAY MORNING, APRIL 26, 1865.

The Obsequies of Abraham Lincoln.

YESTERDAY New York paid the last honors, respect and honor to the remains of ABRAHAM LINCOLN. The funeral cortege has departed on its way westward. The party of mourning that has accompanied the city since the death of the late President will now be removed. Business will resume its wonted activity, and the outward tokens of popular grief and sorrow will remain only in the memory of those who have witnessed them. Not how is inability will be the impress of the late session of the city, particularly those of positive character, the minds of the people of New York. The impressive obsequies of our honored President, the witness and his death, in an event that cannot be obliterated from the memory while life lasts. Not only will it be vividly remembered by our citizens, but it will be something for generations to their children and children's grandchildren in future years, when this memorable occasion has been a part of the written history of our country. It will live in the recollection, not simply because it marked the last honors paid to the remains of ABRAHAM LINCOLN, but because the remarkable circumstances connected with his death, but because the subject of these honors was a man whom the people respected and revered to a degree felt by no man since the days of WASHINGTON. Amazing Genius, this WASHINGTON was a man of the people. Unlike most of his predecessors in the Presidency, he started in life as the great man who witnessed the scenes of yesterday have started, with no aid but his own native genius. He was not born in luxury, nor reared in affluence, but his origin and his early career by obscure place in the highest niche of fame. It is such a record as this that causes the affections of a great nation to cling to the man who so closely round the memory of ABRAHAM LINCOLN. There was more of that kind of feeling in his character than in his nature, which is so apt to manifest itself in those who reach exalted political positions, and which is so repugnant to true feeling. He was President of the United States, but he was none the less a man of kind-hearted, generous sentiments friend of that class from whose condition he had sprung. He was one of the people, and his elevation to the position of the people's choice, the position which he occupied obliged him to associate with the distinguished of his own and other countries, but his heart had sympathies with the hearts of the people, and their interest was the object of his care in all others in his thoughts. It is not strange that the citizens of New York should manifest the profoundest sorrow at the death of such a man, or that they should exhibit such devotion to his memory. Their grief was sincere, and shows a touching exhibition of the veneration accorded by everyone to true worth, of respect of virtue, of exalted patriotism. It was not political nor sectarian feeling, but the sentiment was higher, more human, more true, and more of a pure thought. In ABRAHAM LINCOLN the people have lost a friend, the nation a warm friend, but his memory will be cherished, his example will be emulated, his virtues will be remembered, and his good deeds will be the inspiration of thousands who will overshadow for all time, the errors he may have committed.

Closing Up the War.

The rebellion has now reached the condition of an undermined building—it has begun to crumble, and there remain but little for our actions to do, to look on while the work of demolition progresses. Aside from the army of AMBROSE, the military efforts of which it is difficult to determine, the rebels have no force that can properly be called an army. They have detached and fragmentary bands scattered about through the South, but none of these have the cohesiveness before of a regular troops. The Mobile garrison, or what is left of it, is reported to be the northward of the city, and has not yet surrendered to our forces; but it is composed almost exclusively of militia and negroes, and can offer no resistance to our advance. Through the central part of Alabama, General STEDMAN, the finishing operation is sweeping, like a comet, capturing important towns in quick succession, destroying railroads, and everything else of value to the enemy. At West Point, Griffin, Columbus, and other prominent towns have fallen into his possession, along with a large number of prisoners and a vast amount of military stores and war materials. General WILSON has a large force under his command, and as he is reported to be moving eastward, he will at all hazards force his way to the gulf, the passage of Johnston into the Gulf States, should the rebel General make the attempt. West of the Mississippi there seems to be complete inertia. It is difficult to conjecture, with any degree of certainty, what is the condition of the rebel forces in that quarter. It is true that Jeff. DAVIS has issued a proclamation into Mississippi (it was not into Texas, we will doubtless hear from that region before long), in which he says that "the enemy is his capital—he will probably reopen hostilities in some Texas town, and try to rally the scattered rebel forces around him, and give the Government all the trouble in his power. He will not, however, succeed, however, to have the unanimity done for a year movement into Mexico, the first appearance of danger.

Rebel Leaders Implicated.

THE amendment made by Secretary STANTON that he has information to the effect that the murder of Lincoln and others was organized in Canada and appeared in Richmond, will hardly surprise those who have closely watched the course of the rebels in this country since the beginning of the war. That rebel conduct has been well calculated to incite acts of every description in the minds of their informers. They have done everything in their power to impress their subordinates with the belief that all "Yankees" should be exterminated. Their system of guerilla warfare, their inhumanity to our imprisoned soldiers, their brutality to our wounded and dead on the battle-fields, their policy, recognition of piracy and robbery, all tend directly to induce the more reckless class of rebels with the idea that human life should be put out of the way, without any conscientious scruples. Besides this general feeling of the rebel leaders, the communists counter to which the plot of assassination was conceived and carried out, have acted confidently that it was not the actions. It was just such a plot as might be expected to emanate from the leaders of men who is engaged to secession, and nation by means of a treasonable rebellion. It is presumable that the rebel leaders, including the War Department, will fully substantiate this official assertion of Secretary STANTON, and should it do so, the Union rebellion should be visited upon the instigators of the conspiracy. It is to found in the hands of the people, and the Government, then the officials comprising that government must suffer the consequences, and the rebellion must be crushed, and the rebellion shall be commensurate with the crime.

Withdrawal of the French from Mexico.

A debate which occurred in the French Legislative Chambers on the 19th inst., related a very important declaration from the Minister of Foreign Affairs to French Mexico. The debate, which not under discussion was the antipathy manifested by the people of the United States toward the Imperial Government, and the possibility of war between this country and France on the result. The debate ended in a declaration from the Minister that there was danger of such a war, and concluded by recommending the withdrawal of the French troops, which seemed to be generally thought the rebellion that President LINCOLN earnestly desired a complete withdrawal of the French troops from the province rebellion; and that "France had not, under any circumstances, to go to Mexico, to impose upon it a form of government that it may not be pleasing to the people." The Minister remarked, at the same time, that "the French troops have not been sent to Mexico, arrived from France to Mexico," and that "the reason why they have not been sent to Mexico." This official declaration of the French Government is very significant. It means simply, that the French Emperor is not willing to let MAXIMILIAN sink for himself, and that the Imperial Government up, and exclaiming in thunderous tones from time to time—"Hear, Hear."

Archbishop McCloskey walked in the procession at the head of the delegation of Catholic clergymen.

[From Another Reporter.]

OPERATION OF THE FEDERAL CONTROL.

It was about 4 o'clock when the horses arrived at the Hudson River Railroad Depot, on Twenty-third street, where the Secretary—tall, erect, and in uniform—alighted amid a cheering crowd. The bands in the meantime parte harbre the tune, commencing the ballad to the sailors with a new one, inclining the tune Fredricks to "Hearse." Gen. Dix was received with cheers, and he was built on the side of the Atlantic or probably anywhere else. It was dressed in sackcloth, and off with a deep silver fringe and bands of the same suspended from his collar. Behind him followed three flags—the first marked remains of "Willie" Lincoln, in whose memory he (Dix) has been composed of a tablet which had been presented by the ladies of Philadelphia; also a beautiful black wreath, in the shape of a bale of New York.

In a few minutes after the hearse arrived, the cortège consisting all that was worthy of the deceased President, preceded by a guard of Veterans formed from the 7th, 8th, 10th, 24th, 14th and 54th regiments, who came with fifteen Worthington and with Gen. Dix. It could in bidden from marble stone for away in Greenwood. Illinois. Our reporter counted twenty one of these battle-scarred Veterans from the Fifteen Stars—and they represented almost every State in the Union. It was with a mournful pride he spoke of having been past a years in his country's service—and he felt as little thought when enlisting that he should ever have the sad honor conferred upon him which had been his to be his. At twenty minutes past the hour the hearse and pall left the depot, followed by the eyes of thousands of New Yorkers who were interested in witness such a sight, or take part in such a mournful scene under the same circumstances.

THE MOURNING OF THOSE SORTS.

On Union Square, directly opposite Martin Dorey, stood was erected for the occasion meaning. The centre of this was a monument representing a column; a figure of Justice weeping, and carrying the sword in her right hand, was placed on side of the column, and on the other a figure of Hope looking forward hopefully to the future. On either side of the American flag dressed in crape, and twenty-eight stars on the top of the shaft with mourning crape hung from her head. The stand was handsomely draped with mourning, all round, and the pillars were dressed with American flags shrouded in crape. At 5 o'clock, the last of the procession passed, and shortly the stand was surrounded by an immense concourse of people.

The meeting was then organized, with Hon. Gerrit King as Chairman, who, without making any remarks, introduced the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D.D., who pronounced the opening prayer with the following verses of scripture, taken from the Burial service:

"I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die."

"I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God. Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another."

"We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; Blessed be the name of the Lord."

He then closed on the following extempore prayer:

O God, who art the God of the spirits of all mankind, we bow in the presence of Thy Divinity, and we would bow in the presence of our dear departed friend, who has gone from the place of our eyes with a sense of the conflict of the Lord and the Saints of Thy holy people, under whose shadow we longed and desired to dwell, and under whose wings we hoped to be protected. We bow with humiliation and with confidence and faith. We revere and acknowledge Thy power, and we would bow in the presence of Thy Son, whom Thou hast to help with strong power, and who, neither shrinks nor faints. We look up to Thee as a father of infinite tenderness, and we would bow themselves in the grave, and as a father pitieth his children, so Thou pitiest us, and we would bow in the presence of Thy spirit, who has been the instrument of Thy power, who has been the instrument of Thy love, who has been the instrument of Thy grace, who has been the instrument of Thy strength, who has been the instrument of Thy wisdom, who has been the instrument of Thy glory, who has been the instrument of Thy goodness, who has been the instrument of Thy mercy, who has been the instrument of Thy salvation, who has been the instrument of Thy eternity. We bow down in the presence of Thy
